PLAYBOY'S
COLLEGE GIRLS

PLAYBOY PRESS

Photographing beautiful women on college campuses has been an annual event at Playboy since 1977, when we presented the Girls of the Big Ten in our premiere college girls pictorial. The exercise, if such a word can be applied to so pleasant an activity, has been an instructive one. On several campuses, our endeavors have met with predictably small but vociferous groups of would-be censors who proclaim that nudity must be either a political crime or a sin. Not surprisingly, always outnumbering them are those who consider the celebration of the female form a fine thing indeed. The Pac 10 crowd in the photo at right are typical enthusiastic supporters. We also are ready to defend to our last roll of film our freedom of expression, a constitutional right protestors always seem to forget about. Our travels to campuses coast-to-coast have given us an enlightened perspective on today's female college student. As the placard says, college girls want to have fun. But frankly, they want a whole lot more. Whether they're enrolled in a Big Ten, Pac 10, A. C. C. or Ivy League college, education comes first with these women, and they are prepared to burn the midnight oil to get it. Even girls from the top ten party schools admit it: Party time is the time outside of study time. They should all be proud of themselves. We certainly are.

M Meet the Girls of the Pac 10, as breathtaking as the stunning Pacific Coast landscape they inhabit. All that fresh air and sunshine leads to unfettered ambition: Kristin Hera (left) of the University of Oregon plans to become an investigative reporter; Romona Turner (below) is studying computer programming at Stanford.

Wendy Vincent (above) of Arizona State plays tennis and racquetball. The University of Arizona's upward-bound Teresa Greer (right) likes hiking and camping.

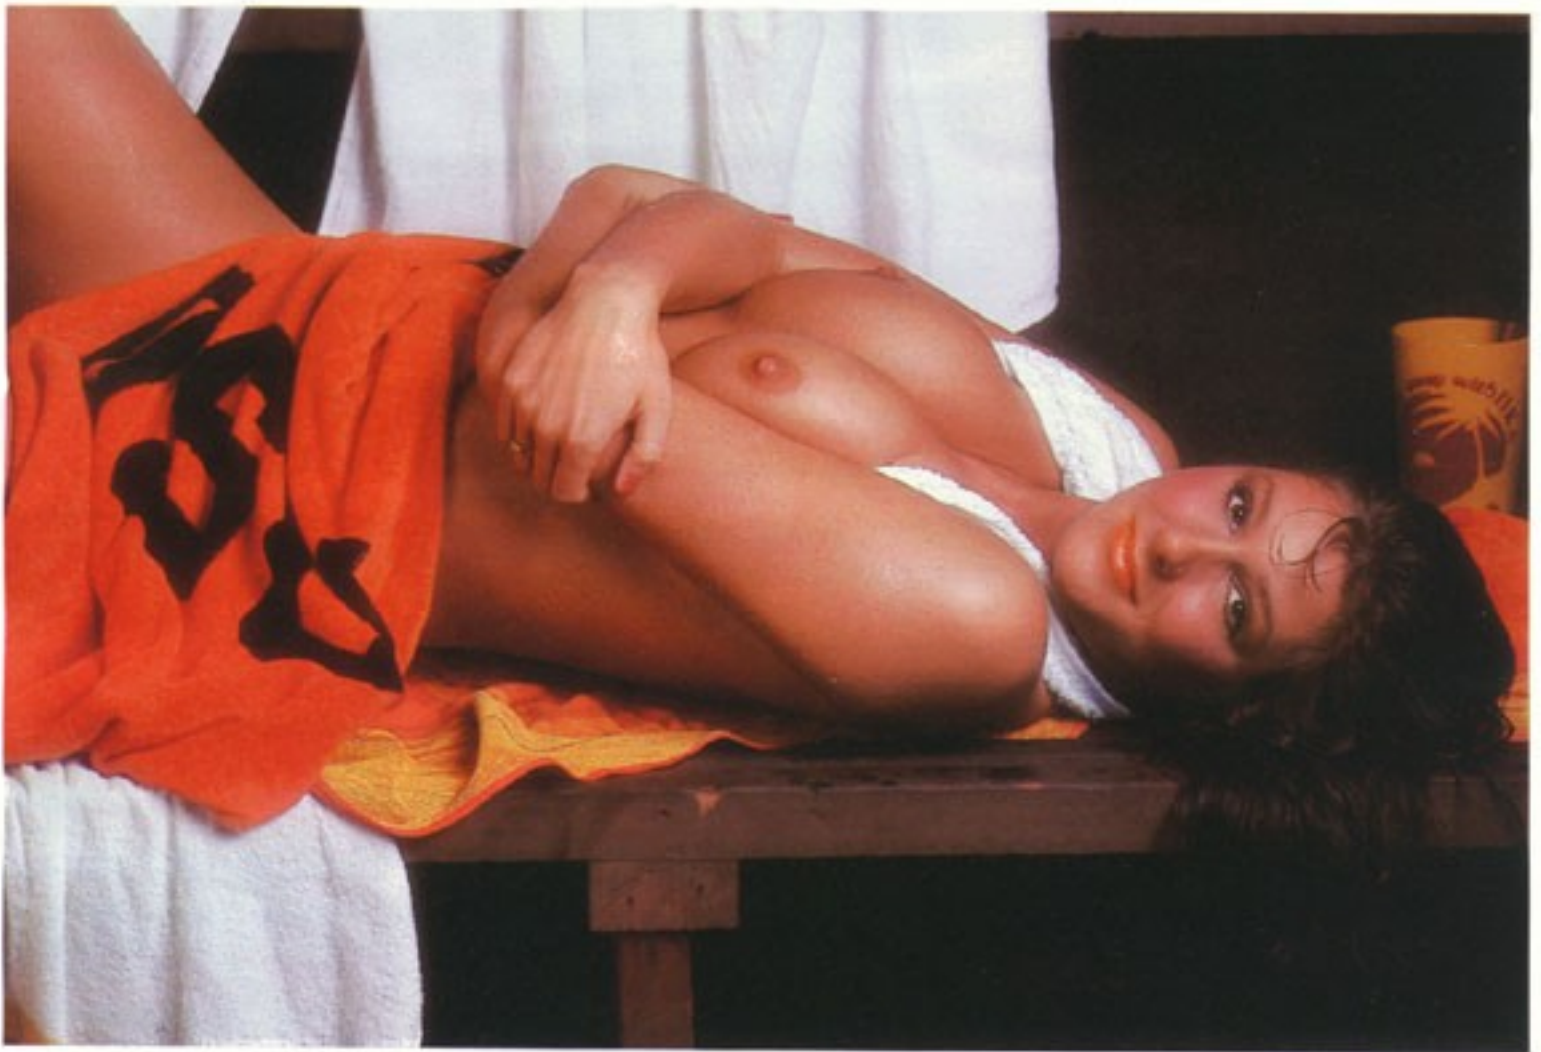

Washington State University marketing student Jotina Trujillo (left) has close at hand everything she needs for finals cramming. Lisa Thompson (above) has a Washington State cougar on her chest and coursework in public relations on her mind.

USC's Becky LeBeau (below) plays guitar, writes songs, and has appeared in music videos with Billy Crystal and David Lee Roth. Kendra Lee Crass (right) promises a warm smile and a friendly hello for everyone on her OSU campus, even people she doesn't know.

Business major Ashley Dei is a student at the University of Southern California, likes swimming and tennis. Chryste Lee Jamison is in Oregon U's School of Journalism.

Campuses where rockin' and reelin' run head-to-head with readin' and writin' was the subject of a January 1987 article in Playboy (Top 40 Party Colleges). We decided the girls at the top ten deserved a pictorial of their own. Janice Hruska (below) of Slippery Rock U. and Renée Caldwell (right) of Cal State, Chico, agreed.

Clockwise from below: Elizabeth Zulick is a medical arts student at the University of Miami; Plymouth State's Jessica Rogers doesn't like early morning classes; Miami's Karen Dann wants a career in criminal psychology; Michele Yee of San Diego State still has to make a career decision between modeling and fashion designing.

Peggy Brady is an instructor at a local health club when she's not studying or hanging out at her favorite fraternity at the University of Vermont.

Miami's Lester Kerstetter (left) feels most down-to-earth under a sunset at Key West. Calverley Beaulieu, Anne Jacobson and Audrey Scussel (above) get ready for a party at the University of Connecticut. Sheena Grand (below), also of U Conn, is a South American who is planning a two-year stint in the Peace Corps.

Representing the University of Virginia are Angela Harris (right), who prefers intellectual stimulation to beer blasts, and Paula Carr (below), a psychology major, who was born in Heidelberg, Germany. Pretty sights at West Virginia University are Justine Conners (far right) and Lisa Marie Carpenter (overleaf).

Jennifer Verbeerst (left) is a state of Michigan native turned beach beauty who finds the academic atmosphere at San Diego State as agreeable as the weather. Denise Cummings (below) of Plymouth State likes mountains and loves foreign travel. Mary Snyder (bottom) is serious about her studies at Baptist-affiliated Mercer University.

The Atlantic Coast Conference exists in states that are among the country's original colonies, where the coeds are constitutionally inclined to be audacious and absolutely adorable. Our visit with A. C. C. beauties commences with Anne Ballance (left) of Wake Forest and Kerry McClurg (below) of the University of Maryland.

Future corporate attorney Cara Lee Macdonald (below) takes a solitary stroll on the outskirts of her University of Virginia campus. Brandy Brandenburg (right), a student at Georgia Tech, had a similar idea and found similar topography.

Maryland's Leslie Brown (below) plays jazz piano, models, and looks forward to a career in the fashion world. Elaine Ford (right) supports her studies at Duke University by tending bar and working as a photographer. She loves exploring new places.

Lynell Lowren (above) studies aerospace engineering at Georgia Tech, with hopes of working for NASA some day. UNC's LaGena Lookabill (right) is working at obtaining degrees in psychology and dramatic arts, wants a career as a professional entertainer.

Being smart most definitely does not mean being unsexy, as our photos of the women of the Ivy League colleges prove. Jocelyn Morin (below) of Harvard/Radcliffe is bright and unabashed; she claims to like men who are dumb and good-looking. Sarah Miller (right) of Yale is dedicated to keeping the environment beautiful.

Del (below left), as the Cornell University business student calls herself, has large ambitions; she wants to own a multi-million-dollar corporation. Dorothy Shull (below right) of Brown University would like to become a vocal recital soloist. Cornell's Maryanne Newton (right) digs archeology and doesn't dig "huge parties filled with alienation."

Dartmouth's Tauvia Frank (above) has interests ranging from poetry to karate; she is a future actress or attorney. A former competitive figure skater, Harvard's Lisa Ryan says her Playboy photo session was a dream come true.

Exotic Celia Wahuwa (left) of Dartmouth College says she and her family have lived all over the world and narrowly escaped dangerous political situations in Southeast Asia. Her experiences should give her ample material for her hoped-for career as a novelist. Alissa Ann Ballou (below) is a Yale student magna cum laude who speaks fluent Italian, French, German and Spanish. She "can't wait to live somewhere else in the world," preferably Rome.

Patricia Neiwich (above) of Cornell loves the classics as well as bubble baths. Columbia's Veronica Smith (below) has designs on marketing her own bathing suit line. Alexandra Wild (right) of Brown wants to live on a secluded estate.

They hail from the heartland, where football teams have names such as Badgers, Wolverines, Wild Cats, Hawkeyes, Buckeyes. These are the girls of the Big Ten. Californian Karen MacGowan (left) went to Wisconsin on a journalism scholarship. Cheryl Graham and Larissa Klavins (below, left and right) attend Northwestern U.

Valerie Bowman (above) likes good food, good music and good friends at Indiana University. She has no patience with "men who think every girl is stupid." Paige Seyffer (right) of Ohio State likes to exercise and likes men who have good bodies, too.

Monica Purvis (above) is involved in student government; she's on the Dean's List at Purdue, where she studies "supervision technology." She's willing to relax, though, with a romantic, sensitive man. Rosalyn Watson (right), an English major at the University of Michigan, has a special interest in ballet.

Indiana's Marea Pond (far left) puts the Bloom into Bloomington; she has acting ambitions. Jazz lover Mary Fauquher (left) of Michigan State plans a career in public relations. Northwestern's Karen Krupinski (above) likes taking long walks and watching old movies on late-night TV. Photogenic Jill Werner (below) of Michigan State wants to own a modeling agency.

Linnette Postel (below) is a cheerleader at Iowa and once sang with Barry Manilow. Indiana's Theresa McAllister (bottom), who runs and does aerobics, plans to work with the physically handicapped. Jo Pangilinan (right) of the Philippines and the University of Illinois likes Orange Crush, football and full moons.

Clockwise from near right:
Jennifer Anderson of Purdue hustles for her muscles; she's a body-building devotee.
Iowa's Molly Neuenswander considers herself independent and enjoys meeting a variety of people. Ingrid Leil-koks, also of Iowa, plans to earn her Ph.D. in psychology.
Yvonne Nunez of Indiana,
another shapely body-builder, is interested in owning her own health and fitness club.

Sherry Arnett first came to Playboy's attention when she was a student at the University of Iowa. She was working on her pharmacy degree and hoping to do "a little modeling." She has since become a Playmate (Miss January 1986) and a very successful model. Deborah Martin (overleaf) attends the University of Wisconsin. She likes men who are "polite, athletic ... and fun to seduce!"
